CHI-CHI-HA-ERH STEEL PLANT, FU-LA-ERH-CHI, CHINA

This report, prepared in response to DIA requirement DIAAP IR5-2, is part of a series which will cover selected industrial installations in China.

The Chi-chi-ha-erh Steel Plant (BE No [REDACTED]) is situated on the SW edge of [REDACTED]

*This installation was listed in the requirement as the Fu-la-erh-chi Arsenal. For the purpose of this report the BE name has been used.

Fu-la-erh-chi along the Nen Chiang (river) at 47-11N 123-38E. Approximately 600 acres in area, the plant is partially wall secured and is rail served. Electrical power is supplied by the Fu-la-erh-chi Heat and Power Plant [REDACTED]

No finished products were observed; however, from the identification of the various components it can be inferred that heavy steel products are produced at this plant. These might include cast, rolled, or forged steel and special alloy steel items such as armor plate, gun barrels, tank hulls, and heavy machine parts. The probable open hearth building (item 6 on Figure 2) is identical to the one at Ping-li-sha-cheng Armament Plant in Pao-tou.
